INTRODUCTION

To read the names of those Nantucket Indians who died in 1763-1764 is at the least a memorial to the nearly forgotten original inhabitants of the island. The epidemic which took the lives of two hundred and twenty two Indians appalls us. It must have been a major tragedy on the island in the eighteenth century, even if epidemics were more prevalent then than they are today.

However, it is the nature of historical source material to focus upon death, disputes, and disasters, because these provide the occasions in the average person's life when his name is most likely to be written into the public record. On the basis of studies of such demographic data as this list of names of men, women, and children provides, we shall be able to study the cultural and environmental adaptations of these historic Nantucket inhabitants. Also, by combining archaeology with documentary studies, we may be able to locate precisely the dwellings of many of these families. We offer this report, therefore, with respect and honor for the names of the dead, and as a contribution to future historical and archaeological studies of the Nantucket Indians.
SOURCES OF DATA

A list of 222 names of Nantucket Indians, collated alphabetically, has been derived from a manuscript "Names of the Indians died of the sickness 1763" (List A) at the Peter Foulger Museum, Nantucket. The list in its original order has been published only occasionally in the past (Inquirer and Mirror 1890). The original order of names is neither alphabetical nor by families; it might be chronological. Although the unknown author lists 223 names, he gives for his total number 222. His mistake appears in his tallying. However, we note that there is a duplicate entry for "Tom Ichabod", and that 222 is the total quoted by Starbuck (1797).

Two partial lists, "A List of the Indian Natives who died on the Island of Nantucket with a Yellow Fever from 1-8mo-1763 to 2mo-1764" (List B), and "An Account of Indians Deceased 1st of August 1763" (List C), have approximately the same order of names but different spelling and naming styles. For example, "Smug" in List A corresponds to "Micah Smug" in List B. Since Lists B and C are missing their final portions, not all of the variants of names on these two lists can be correlated with the names on List A.

The names are grouped here by family name with the preferred spelling as known from deeds or wills first, followed by common variants from Lists A, B, or C. The names are given in the spelling of List A, with significant alternatives from Lists B and C shown in parentheses.

For data on the epidemic and symptoms of the disease, see Stackpole (1975) and three manuscript letters at the Peter Foulger Museum (Starbuck 1797, 1798; Coffin 1798).
